Plastic is widely used in modern life as it is practical, lightweight, and inexpensive. However, its convenience has created a serious environmental problem. (18)____. Many animals become trapped in plastic debris, while marine life often eats tiny plastic particles. In addition, a large amount of the United Kingdom's plastic waste is dumped and burned overseas, affecting people's health.

One major issue with plastic is its durability. (19)____. Because it is cheap and often disposable, plastic has contributed to a throwaway culture. As a result, a huge amount of plastic waste is produced each year. Much of this waste ends up in the oceans, (20)____. UK supermarkets alone generate hundreds of thousands of tonnes of plastic packaging annually.

Another concern is microplastics, (21)____. Synthetic clothing releases microfibrils during washing, and microbeads in personal care products can pass through water systems into the ocean. These particles have been found worldwide, even in remote areas such as Antarctica.

Plastic pollution harms wildlife and ecosystems. Larger animals may become entangled in plastic waste, (22)____. These particles have even been detected in humans. Although some actions, such as banning certain plastics, have been taken, stronger global measures are urgently needed to reduce plastic use and protect the planet.

Efforts to save the spoon-billed sandpiper highlight both the fragility of nature and the determination of conservationists to prevent extinction. This small migratory bird, native to the Arctic regions, is distinguished by its uniquely shaped bill, which flares into a spoon-like tip. If it becomes extinct, thousands of years of evolution will come to an end - a real tragedy.

For many years, the bird remained poorly documented, adding to its mystery but hindering conservation efforts. To address this, an international team of experts organized an expedition to one of its last breeding areas in North-East Russia. Their mission was to observe, record, and collect eggs from the wild. These eggs would be hatched in controlled conditions, and the chicks later transported to a conservation center in the United Kingdom. The goal was to establish a secure, self-sustaining population that could act as a safeguard against extinction in the wild.

The spoon-billed sandpiper undertakes an extraordinary migration of around 8,000 kilometers, traveling between Southeast Asia and Arctic Russia. Despite the harsh weather conditions in its breeding grounds, the region offers abundant food and fewer predators, making it ideal for raising young.

However, the species has declined rapidly due to habitat destruction and hunting along its migration route. Coastal development has eliminated key resting and feeding areas, while in some regions, birds are still trapped for food. Conservation groups have worked with local communities to reduce hunting by offering alternative livelihoods.

During the expedition, researchers located several nests and collected eggs for incubation. Although some nests were lost to predators, others hatched successfully, offering hope. The chicks were carefully raised in a biosecure environment to protect them from disease. These efforts represent a crucial step toward ensuring the survival of this unique species.

In today's modern society, many people face economic challenges due to rising living costs and rapid changes brought by modernization. [I] Basic necessities such as food, clothing, and other daily expenses continue to increase, placing pressure on families. [II] As a result, some students choose to take on part-time jobs to support themselves and ease their parents' burden. [III] From a positive perspective, working part-time offers numerous valuable benefits for students. [IV]

One major advantage is that part-time work helps students use their free time productively. Instead of engaging in negative activities, such as unhealthy social behaviors, they can spend their time working in places like restaurants or shops. Although balancing work and study may initially be challenging and exhausting, students eventually realize that their efforts are worthwhile and beneficial for their personal growth. As the Malay proverb goes, "Rowing upstream, swimming to shore, suffering first, and enjoying later."

Financial benefits are another important reason students take part-time jobs. Some individuals work to keep the wolf from the door or to cover necessary expenses such as tuition fees, rent, or transportation, while others earn extra money for personal use. Regardless of their purpose, earning their own income teaches them how to manage money wisely, save for the future, and become more self-reliant. This also reduces the financial pressure on their families.

In conclusion, part-time jobs provide students with opportunities to use their time properly, improve skills, gain financial independence, and develop strong discipline. These experiences not only shape their character but also lay a solid foundation for a successful and independent future.
